Vice President of the Membership Meeting of Asia-Pacific Angiology Academic Alliance

Greetings from Malaysia and welcome to the 10th Asia-Pacific Angiology Academic Alliance Congress (APAC) & 2024 International Annual Symposium of Macau Health Bureau Doctors' Association!

Asia-Pacific Angiology Academic Alliance, established in 2015, has grown tremendously over the near past decade under the leadership of Professor Zheng Yuehong. With a strong membership of around 1500, spanning over 18 countries, APAAA is one the largest vascular societies in the region. It provides an excellent platform for experts in vascular diseases over the globe to connect and share their experience, ideas and innovations for the advancement of management of vascular diseases. I am certain that APAA will continue to grow and be more prominent in different countries in Asia-Pacific region in years to come.

Have a wonderful congress to share, learn and connect. Enjoy Macau!

Giuliano Borda Luque

Member of the Membership Meeting of Asia-Pacific Angiology
Academic Alliance

Dear colleagues:

In humans, the tendency to group together is evident among those who share similarities or objectives as a desire to exchange ideas and mutual help. The existence of surgical societies is part of the academic life of surgeons and their importance is unquestionable. It's main function revolves around science and it's mission being to teach and disseminate knowledge; with the ultimate goal of improving the health and well-being of patients.

Life and surgery gave me the opportunity to meet Prof. Yuehong Zheng and to join the Asia-Pacific Angiology Academic Alliance (APA) where I have shared with professionals who have the academic characteristics that distinguish a good surgeon: being a good operator, teacher, researcher and responsible manager; but above all I have had the honor of meeting excellent people and friends.

From these lines I want to congratulate the organizers of the 10th Asia-Pacific Angiology Academic Alliance Congress (APAC) and 2024 International Annual Symposium of Macau Health Bureau Doctor's Association, an event that promotes the academic progress and cooperation of surgeons in the Asia Pacific region with the objective of the growth of surgical specialities and vascular surgery. I am sure of the success of the Congress.

Generally, the outcomes of endovascular treatment for aortoiliac occlusive arterial diseases are favorable.
However, there are reports suggesting better outcomes with covered stents compared to bare-metal stents in lesions at the aortic bifurcation.
In our department, we have adopted the use of covered stents for endovascular treatment of aortoiliac occlusive arterial diseases, specifically for aortic bifurcation lesions, severe calcified lesions, concurrent dilatational changes, and in-stent restenosis, achieving satisfactory results.
This presentation shares our experience with the use of covered stents in the aortoiliac region.

The number of patients with chronic kidney disease on regular hemodialysis is continuously increasing and reached 340000 with is as many as one in 359 general population of Japan. Along with the increase of hemodialysis patients, demand of flow volume reduction surgery for complicated hemodialysis access, such as high flow arterio-venous fistula (AVF), edema of AVF limb, ischemia of the AVF limb is also increasing. Banding of the conduit is common procedure of choice for patients require flow volume reduction, but high ratio of thrombosis of AVF, recurrence of high flow is reported. High patency rate after the procedure and stable flow volume reduction over the long term are expected for flow volume reduction surgery.

In Macao, cancer has been a very significant disease as being ranked one of the top 10 leading causes of death for years. Primary care doctors are many people's first of line defense against cancer. Determining an appropriate cancer screening regimen is one of the most important and challenging preventive care tasks in primary care.
